Australia's peak women's organisation working to eliminate domestic and family violence

Women's Services Network launches exciting new website

The Women's Services Network (WESNET) today launched their exciting new website "Virtual WESNET".

'This is another step forward in meeting the needs of our communities to manage the disgraceful scourge of violence against women. The community is increasingly showing their lack of tolerance to violence against women, said Pauline Woodbridge, National Chairperson of WESNET.

We need every resource, every opportunity every day to protect women from the violence from the men in their lives.

'Virtual WESNET will link the workers at the grass roots level. Every Service, no matter its target group, no matter where they are in Australia will come across domestic and family violence issues. Virtual WESNET enables good quality information to be available where and when it is needed, said Ms Woodbridge.

'The new website and online forums will enable domestic and family violence workers to 'virtually' cross our huge Continent. They will be able to link, network with and support others to build knowledge and create new capacities to respond better to women and their children experiencing violence, said Dale Wakefield, NT representative on the National WESNET Committee.

'At a time when Australia has a significant National Plan to reduce violence against women, Virtual WESNET will play an important role in the implementation of the Plan.
